

About the Classics Section

Author : A Michael Froomkin

Date : October 11, 2010

Jotwell is an online journal devoted to reviews of the great recent writing related to the law that top scholars in the field believe deserves a wide readership.

The Classics section, however, is a little different: it provides a home for the occasional review of classic works of law, especially those unjustly neglected. (To qualify as a 'classic' for this purpose the work must have been published at least 50 years before the review.) Unlike Jotwell's other sections, the Classics Section doesn't have a board of editors, nor will we attempt a regular publication schedule. We'll publish something appropriate only if and when someone is moved to write it.
